

A Boarding House Thief Brought Up With a Sharp Turn By Judge Aspinll.
HUBBELL'S FIELD IN BROOKLYN
Tried to Lie to the Judge, Didn't Succeed Very Well.

There were no trials before Judge Aspinall In the County Court this morning. A number of prisoners were arraigned, and all pleaded guilty to the offenses as charged, or in a minor degree, and were remanded for sentence. Among these was Henry Hubbell, of extremely plausible address, who said he was 46 years old, and resided at 192 Boylston street, Boston.- He is charged with having committed three burglaries in Brooklyn ,and was an expert boarding-house thief. He pleaded guilty to one indictment of burglary in the third degree. On July 20 last he entered the apartment of Mrs. Anna Hale, in Mrs. Brooks' boarding house, at 125 Livingston street, and was caught in the act of robbing a trunk. He was also identified by Mrs. L. S. Skidmore, of 186 Clinton street, of having robbed her of $100? on May 1, 1896; and also with having stolen $700 worth of jewelry, diamonds and money from Mrs. Knowdall's boarding house at 166 Clinton street. In answer to questions by Judge Aspinall, Hubbell said he had only been in Brooklyn twenty-four hours when his last offense was committed, and had resided in Boston all his life.

He told a rambling story of being a salesman of "patent designs" and that he came from Boston to borrow money of a "near relative," who, he finally said, was his brother, who did business in West Fourteenth street, Manhattan, but whose exact address and place of residence seemed to have escaped his memory. Judge Aspinall interrupted him at this point, saying: "You are lying from the word go and I'll attend to your case on Monday. We wont' have any Boston crooks in Brooklyn —I'll tell you that." While Hubbell was attempting further explanations he was hustled unceremoniously into the pen
